Clinical Documentation

Take the Pain out of Documentation by Taking Advantage of Quizlets

Scenario

Your Behavioural Health Director has asked that all of their clinical documents be made electronic, watermarked as "Behavioural Health" and secured to only certain physician groups (with a few exceptions, of course).

Further, so as not to discourage its use, creating these electronic documents should be painless, providing the users with templates, paste-able text blocks and database fields. (…it would be nice if they could just talk into it.)

Additionally, to ensure compliance, the Director would like all Behavioural documents to be co-signed by one of his senior staff, even if those documents are already being co-signed for other reasons. He would also like to receive notification of
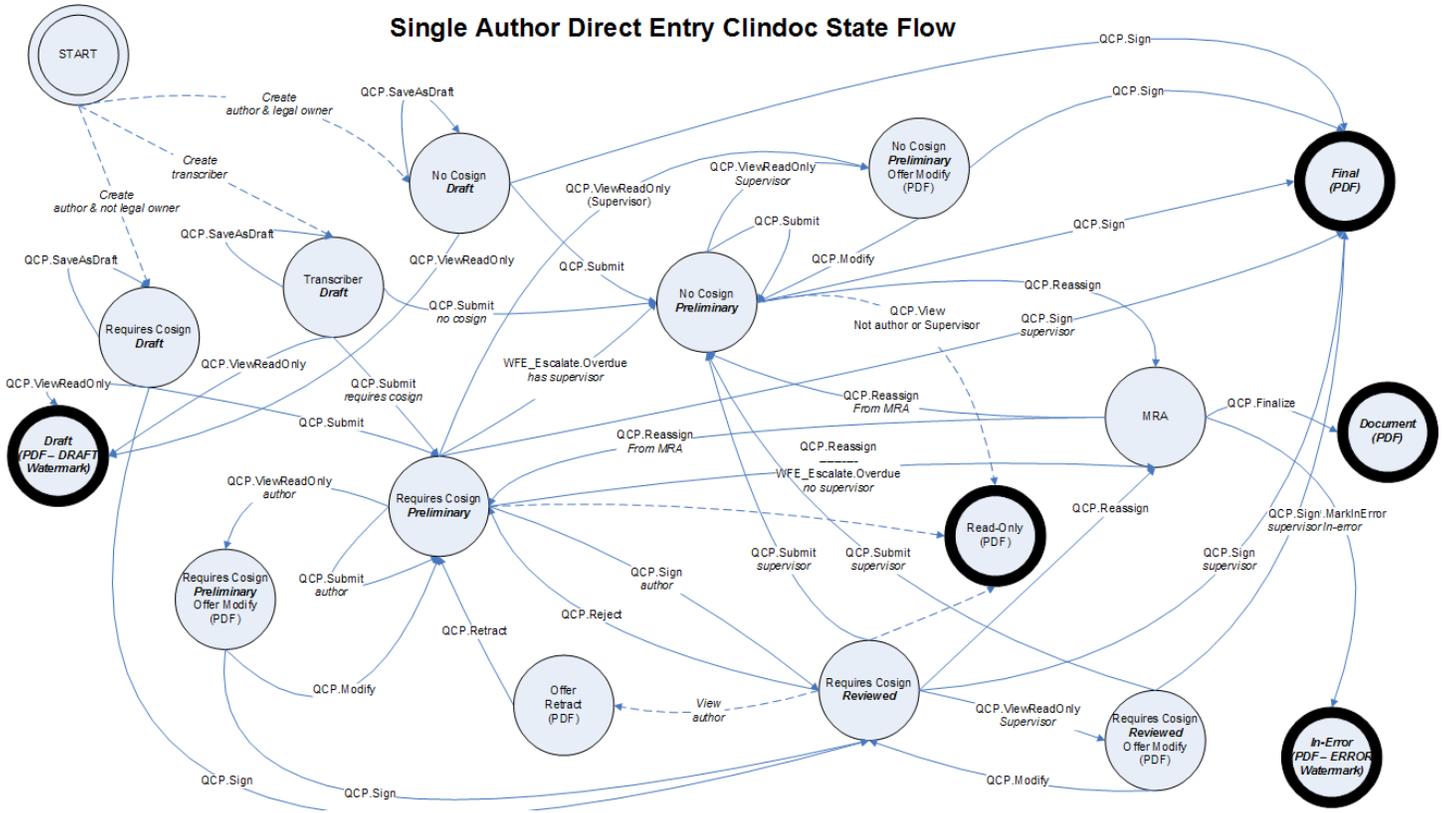

RelWare Solution

Your OneRecord administrator verifies that the Behavioural folder in the Clinical Documents tree is assigned the "View Behavioural Documents" permission. She then grants this permission to the requested physician groups, and revokes for the physicians that were exceptions.

She also adds some "canned text" blocks provided by the Director, to the Behavioural folder. Finally, she updates the Quizlet templates for the Behavioural documents to include: inbox routing, digital signatures, watermarks and time-based escalations.

Your doctors love that they can now click through most of their documenting, and some do actually just talk into it*. Your Behavioural Director is amazed at how easily you managed it all (and so are you).

*With supporting applications, such as "DragonDictate", users can simply speak into a microphone, and dictate a majority of their notes.

Single Author Direct Entry Clindoc State Flow

Don't Panic...

You don't have to understand this diagram to recognize how insurmountable some rules around documentation can seem.

But, if you think that the routing and business rules around some of your documentation is complex, you should know that this is one of the simpler Clinical Documentation state flows that are supported within Quizlets.

If you would like to see one of our more complex versions, we will happily share one with you, it just requires a larger piece of paper.
